Paul of the Wild

Editor:

Just when I'd thought I'd lost almost all (if not some) hope in humanity and its role it should be playing on this planet, a superhero appears. Thank you, Paul Sever, Keeper of the Wilderness, on behalf of the earth, the wild things that roam and grow there and for future generations to come ("Paul Sever's Wilderness," April 16). I am in appreciation and gratitude of you!

Grass Again

Editor:

At first I laughed at the cartoon showing our supervisors with a beach grass hairdo ("Mailbox," April 16). Then I recalled when Heidi Walters did such a good job bringing the beach grass issue to the North Coast Journal four years ago ("Bad Weed," April 21, 2011). We continue to report dying native trees, protected wetlands buried under destabilized sand, wildlife losses and valuable infrastructure compromised. None of which was supposed to happen according to the "Plan."

Instead of stepping back to take a hard look at these effects of the war on a naturalized grass, we are asked to pony up another million dollars for a "study." Hidden in this study is $250,000 to dig out two more acres of grass on undisturbed dunes and planting another grass that clearly does not create the buffer that European beach grass does. That has already been proven by university studies.

Ironically Mr. LaValley got freed from his "sabbatical" in the same issue ("Blogjammin"). His nonsensical science was a major part of the genesis of the war on beach grass. One of his original reports showed a plover nest tucked into the European beach grass although he misidentified it as a native variety. We learned that "nests often fail to hatch in restored areas," researchers were leading predators to nests, and the cages around the nests serve as a snack platter for hyper smart ravens. All this continued while threatening the county with lawsuits if we did not bend to his will. Millions were spent.

Third District Supervisor Mark Lovelace tried mightily to justify continued digging out beach grass but in the end had to see light and vote with the rest of the board to amend "the letter" to include some of these concerns. I still hope he will take a walk with us to witness these alarming concerns. And maybe even pitch in with some repairs.

Time to Re-Humanize

Editor:

I appreciate the heartfelt insight of Joshua Kinch's letter of April 16 ("And Another Thing...").

In Humboldt County, we have a homeless population larger than the size of many towns, but priority for relief of their suffering is not on the official agenda. I agree with Joshua, that reactive measures we use now in emergency hospital care, extreme shelter and eradication of camps by police are costly, inefficient and dehumanizing.

The idea of military style barracks, however practical, does not address the safety, dignity and need for privacy that human beings require. We have a model in Portland, Eugene and other cities, of small self-regulated villages of "tiny houses" or tents for secure sleeping, in addition to common areas used for cooking, showers and bathrooms. There are online videos of Opportunity Village and Dignity Village that are very inspiring. The Eureka group AHHA, Affordable Homeless Housing Alternatives, is organized around these principals of safe housing and are actively pursuing them.

It's time to open our eyes to the effects of our failing and predatory eco-

Comment of the Week

"As a mall employee I'm grateful this started. After three years of dealing with dangerous people on a daily basis, we've had enough in the mall. Going to work started feeling like taking a risk every day and it should not be that way for a retail environment."

nomie system. We know that many middle class families fell into poverty and homelessness after the financial crisis of 2008. That house foreclosures are still happening at a frightening rate. That business and political concerns get the big money and human welfare just doesn't. That knowledge makes us all frightened, but helping our fellow citizens would make us less afraid and benefit the whole community.

Peg Anderson, Redway

Finding Unity

Editor:

Many thanks to the North Coast Journal and reporter Linda Stansberry for the moving, in-depth article "Ready/Preparados" (April 9) on the work of the grassroots activist network True North.

Mentioned briefly in the article was the fact that, in addition to the Latino communities in Fortuna and Eureka, other cultural and faith-based groups from various locations in Humboldt and Del Norte counties were represented at True North's Regional Assembly, held in Orick in February. For example, I attended with members of faith-based groups from Eureka, Arcata and McKinleyville. We had met earlier to discuss our concerns, and at the regional meeting we chose homelessness and the need for housing as our immediate focus. A delegation from Klamath chose education as its focus, and another tribal group found that its most urgent concern was cultural self-determination in land management.

We all learned a lot about each other, found common threads in our communities' values and concerns, and agreed that we are all prepared to support one another's aims and efforts in every way possible.

Surviving

Editor:

I am very aware of the Domestic Violence Coordinating Council's Safety and Accountability Assessment, and the work of all of our heroic (underfunded) advocacy organizations. But all I could say to Csilla Adam about her attacker not being held accountable sooner was, "It's wrong." I am sending her — and all survivors — healing energy for recovery ("Violence Foreshadowed," March 26).

When I worked for Open Door Health Clinic, I worked primarily with people who were disabled, addicted, mentally ill — and people who are battered. I loved my patients.

The reason that I knew that so many of my patients were battered is because I practiced universal private screening. This means I asked all of my female patients 13 years and older, and all of my male patients who were at high risk for domestic violence (men in relationships with men, trans people, men with developmental or physical disabilities) carefully crafted, quick questions about domestic violence and sexual abuse.

I was shocked to find that most health care providers in our community do not practice universal private screening. If you ask, practitioners often say "It's too private." My response? "We ask about specific sexual practices, bowel movements, drinking and other drug use. And asking about partner violence is too private?"

I believe it's about fear. What if the patient says, "yes?" Health care providers are not getting the training they need to appropriately respond if a patient discloses. Survivors need validation, caring, non-judgmentalness ... they don't need a pill or analysis. They need to be referred to our terrific (and chronically underfunded) advocacy organizations.

I know that our health community truly cares — I am challenging us to rise up on behalf of all families affected by domestic violence.

Karen L. March, Eureka

have three adorable cats, Summer Thyme, Mycroft and Dusk. I got a black cat named Soot, adopted when I first moved here. I volunteered at the Sequoia Zoo. I took horseback riding lessons with Elaine, and love riding with my ex-teacher JJ.

Mom has been doing this work for 15 years before I was born. A plaque hangs on her wall — an award from the governor of Michigan for establishing the Guinivere Memorial Fund. The fund is named after her cat. Guinivere's mom, the Kent State Memorial cat, was rescued after an abuser killed a German shepherd puppy by throwing it against the wall. The woman whose puppy was killed loves all animals and is now doing work saving species and sending animals back to their habitats.

So, I've known forever that people who beat and hurt their partners also rape and beat their kids and torture their animals.

When I read professor Burstiner's article ("Media Maven," March 26), about finding Max dead and all the other animals, I threw up — literally — I spewed all over myself and sobbed.

My parents told me if you want to get involved, and make change, you should join the All Species Protection Committee of Domestic Violence Coordinating Committee. Call Sheri at 826-4452.

'Not a Police Problem'

Tired of sweeps, Eureka eyes designated homeless campground

Story and photos by Thadeus Greenson

thad@northcoastjournal.com

Trish stood in front of her tent petting her medium-sized, black and brown dog as gusts of wind rustled the nearby brush and dozens of police officers scoured the area, rousing homeless people from their tents to check their identifications and search for outstanding warrants.

The multi-agency sweep of the encampments behind the Bayshore Mall on April 15 netted more than two dozen arrests, according to the Eureka Police Department, and came as a crackdown on what Chief Andrew Mills called “a criminal element that has infiltrated” the network of homeless camps that surround the railroad tracks near the Devil’s Playground. While the officers made efforts to contact every one of the 100 or so people living behind the mall, Mills said folks like Trish, whose only crime was camping, were left alone. But he warned they will be forced to move from the area in several weeks, as soon as the city approves a designated camping area for them.

“I can’t kick people out until we have someplace for them to go,” the chief said, adding that his plan is to have a camping area in place within a month, after which officers will evict everyone from the greenbelts surrounding the mall and conduct regular follow-up patrols to make sure the area remains vacated.

Mills’ announcement — that the city is on the cusp of creating an “organized, controlled and safe” area for the homeless to stay temporarily — was almost lost in the day, as headlines focused on the 27 arrests and the dozen or so firearms EPD has pulled from the area in recent months, which were spread across a folding table in the mall parking lot for an inviting photo op. But to Trish, a woman who appeared in her mid-20s and said she’s been living in the greenbelt for about a year, the possibility of moving someplace where she won’t have to worry about illegal camping tickets and can sleep a bit safer is enticing.

I hate it,” said Trish, who declined to give her last name, saying she’s ashamed of her situation.

Mills said the sweep — which featured more than 50 officers from at least seven agencies — came as a response to an increase in unruly activity in the area and was part of a larger enforcement effort. Recent months have seen EPD serve a series of search warrants on encampments in the area, and the mall itself contracted with the city to provide daily foot patrols inside the mall from March 17 through April 17 (see Blogjammin, page 8, for more details).

Trish and her neighbor, who identified herself only as Donna, said they agree that there’s been an uptick in violence and unruly behavior in the Devil’s Playground area, but Trish said the spike seems to have coincided with EPD’s sweep of encampments at the foot of Del Norte Street some months back. She said that seemed to just move more people into the area behind the mall.

EPD Capt. Steve Watson said history has made clear the city can’t simply sweep and enforce its way out of the homeless problem, which is where the designated camping area comes in, though he and Mills made clear it’s viewed as a temporary arrangement. Long term, Mills said, he’s hopeful that the repurposing of the Multiple Assistance Center and the pursuit of some housing-first strategies will make a lasting difference. But, in the short term, he says people like Trish and Donna need somewhere to go.

Eureka City Manager Gregg Sparks said the city is currently eyeing three properties (two owned by the city and one privately owned) for the potential camping area, though he declined to publicly identify the sites. There are a host of liability concerns associated with creating such a site, and Sparks made clear the city isn’t referring to the proposal as creating a “sanctioned campground” and that, preferably, the city won’t be overseeing the campground’s operations. Instead,

1. ABOUT 100 PEOPLE WERE LIVING IN SOME THREE DOZEN ENCAMPMENTS IN THE AREA BEHIND THE BAYSHORE MALL WHEN EUREKA POLICE CONDUCTED A SWEEP ON APRIL 15, SEARCHING FOR PEOPLE WITH ACTIVE ARREST WARRANTS.
2. TWENTY-SEVEN PEOPLE WERE TAKEN INTO CUSTODY IN THE GREENBELT ON APRIL 15, WHEN ABOUT 50 OFFICERS FROM MORE THAN SEVEN LOCAL AGENCIES SWEEPED THE AREA.
3. MANY OF THE ENCAMPMENTS FOUND BEHIND THE BAYSHORE MALL — LOCATED ON THE RAILROAD TRACKS JUST A STONE'S THROW FROM HUMBOLDT BAY — ARE LITTERED WITH SHOPPING CARTS, TRASH AND DEBRIS.
4. EUREKA POLICE CHIEF ANDREW MILLS (SECOND FROM THE LEFT) ADDRESSES THE MEDIA AS FELLOW OFFICERS LOOK ON.
5. GUNS SEIZED FROM HOMELESS ENCAMPMENTS IN RECENT MONTHS WERE PUT ON DISPLAY DURING A RECENT EPD PRESS CONFERENCE.

Sparks said the city is talking to a number of service providers and community organizations (he wouldn't specify which) about supervising the campground, with EPD conducting periodic patrols.

Mills said he does not envision making the campground a strictly clean and sober environment, as that might keep folks from actually using it. Those camping in the designated area, Mills said, will have "a right to privacy in their tents" but officers patrolling the area will take enforcement action if they see any illegal activity out in the open.

Sparks said Mills was slated to brief the city council on potential properties for the campground at its meeting on April 21, as the Journal went to press, but the topic was only agendized as a discussion item. Ultimately, Sparks said, the council will have to direct staff to move forward with the idea, so any formal action probably remains at least a couple of weeks out. The subject of a designated camping area has proven controversial in the past, especially once proposed locations are made public, so it's unclear how smoothly the process will move forward.

But Mills said it's clear the current situation is untenable. On April 15, as officers scoured the area behind the mall, the greenbelt was sprinkled with more than three dozen campsites that were home to some 100 people. The camps were located in clusters, some of which appeared to be fairly clean and well kept, while others were strewn with shopping carts, litter, refuse and debris.

With a table full of guns in front of him, Mills noted during a press conference that Eureka can't arrest its way out of this situation. "In the long term, there has to be other solutions," he said. "We fully comprehend homelessness is not a police problem."

The various impacts of homeless populations, however, have been left for local police to deal with. Whether Eureka can take steps in the coming weeks to create a designated camping area — and whether that will do anything to stem the tide of impacts — remains to be seen. ●

EMERGENCY / OUTDOORS

Humboldt's Fifth Drowning

The Humboldt County Coroner's Office has identified the man who drowned while swimming near Trinidad's Agate State Beach on Thursday, April 16 as 34-year-old Brad Lee Senatore, of Fairfield. It's the fifth drowning death recorded so far this year in Humboldt County, which typically averages five or six annually.

An experienced diver, Senatore went for a leisure swim in his wetsuit at about 2:30 p.m. when he got caught in a strong current that pulled him south and then west, out to sea. Senatore's wife was watching and called 911 as he appeared in distress, according to a press release.

A sheriff's deputy arrived on scene about 10 to 15 minutes later and pulled Senatore from the water and began CPR, but Senatore was later declared deceased by a responding paramedic.

EMERGENCY / ENVIRONMENT

Dramatic Rescue on the Lost Coast Trail

Emergency crews from almost a dozen agencies worked through the night, Saturday, April 18, and into Sunday morning to rescue a hiker from a remote area of the Lost Coast Trail, near Shelter Cove.

The crews battled an incoming tide, darkness and heavy fog to get the hiker — who'd been critically injured in a fall — to safety. Read the full press from the Briceland Fire Department at www.northcoastjournal.com.

CRIME

DA Says no Crime in Jail Death, Family Responds

Following a review requested by the family of Daren Borges, who died in custody at the Humboldt County jail last June, District Attorney Maggie Fleming determined there was no evidence of crimes committed by the officers who arrested Borges or jail staff.

The Journal reported that Fleming initiated a review in early March, and Fleming released a statement on April 15 detailing the events leading up to Borges' death, much of it documented by video. The report cites a pathologist's report that indicates Borges' death "is attributed to the toxic effects of methamphetamine which [Borges] had in his blood."

Borges' mother has filed a lawsuit against the city of Eureka, and in a statement following the DA's press release, the attorneys representing Stephany Borges wrote that the civil suit will continue and accused officers of neglecting Daren Borges' need for medical attention. "An officer who recklessly ignores an arrestee's serious medical needs, causing death, is guilty of involuntary manslaughter," reads the statement.

BUSINESS / CRIME

Mall Cops

For about the last month, the Eureka Police Department has been under contract to provide daily foot patrols at the Bayshore Mall.

The written agreement between the city and the mall has been in place since March 17, with an EPD officer walking the mall in four- to five-hour shifts, seven days a week and with the city charging the mall $50 an hour for the service. The agreement — which expired April 17 — was apparently reached at the mall's request, in response to an increase in unsavory activity on the premises, ranging from shoplifting to a recent stabbing. (Issues surrounding the mall also, in part, led to a multi-agency sweep of adjacent homeless encampments recently.)

Asked about the agreement, Rouse Properties, which runs the mall and some three dozen others across the nation, issued the following statement:

"The safety of our customers, employees and retailers is our top priority. We continue to work in unison with the Eureka Police Department and our security company to ensure the well-being of all who visit and work at the mall."

Informed that the statement, while appreciated, did little to answer the Journal's questions about the contract with the city and the inspiration behind it, Rouse Properties spokesman Matthew Chudoba referred any additional questions to EPD and city officials.

EPD Capt. Steve Watson said officers have been voluntarily signing up to do the mall duty during their time off, so the agreement isn't affecting regular EPD staffing or shifts. From the department's perspective, Watson said the agreement has been a good thing, allowing officers to get out of their patrol cars to interact with citizens and merchants on a one-on-one basis.

Under the contract, the uniformed patrol officers are working for the city — not the mall — with no special enforcement mandates. EPD Chief Andrew Mills said the direction to officers was to provide a visible presence and talk to people. Officers will intervene if they see criminal activity, but aren't tasked with sniffing out shop lifters or anything like that, he said. As Watson put it, "They're not down there to make arrests, they're down there to be visible and make connections."

Watson said the officers on mall patrol are on special assignment there for the shift, and aren't expected to respond to other calls for service off mall property, though he did say officers wouldn't be prevented from leaving the property to respond to a "major situation, like an officer down."

The mall has a private security force, but according to the city, management felt uniformed EPD officers on regular patrols might help give employees, merchants and customers a sense of security on the premises and deter unsavory activity.

Eureka City Manager Gregg Sparks said he believes it's the first time the city has entered into a contract with a private business to provide additional police services. Sparks described the contract as a break-even deal for the city, with the $50-an-hour covering overtime pay and corresponding impacts on officers' benefits.

With Eureka's first private contract for police patrols winding down, both Sparks and Mills said there have been no talks of renewing or extending the Bayshore Mall agreement. But could arrangements to hire out Eureka police for other patrols be on the horizon? What if Old Town businesses wanted to throw some money at some added foot patrols? What if Henderson Center merchants wanted to do the same?

"If we can get our costs covered, we're open to those kinds of things," said Sparks. For his part, Mills was a bit more cautious, saying that he's leery of spreading officers too thin in a small department. "I think the issue is you can only expect your people to work so much, and it's difficult in a small agency to supply a constant supply of bodies for those types of things," he said.

The question also arises whether the city and the department would be willing to provide the same offer to residential areas. For example, what if a neighborhood watch group saw an issue that might be addressed by a short period of extra patrols and raised the funds to foot the bill? The idea seemed to make Mills a bit uncomfortable. "I really hadn't thought that far down the road," he said. "I want to be careful that we're not, you know, providing special police services for those with the finances to pay. I think it's important for us to police equally in all parts of the city. This was a special circumstance because of a couple of acts of violence that we needed to settle down."

COMMUNITY / COURTS

ACRC v HWMA: Settled

A four-year battle over Arcata's recycling is over.

In 2011, the Arcata Community Recycling Center, a scrappy, built-from-scratch icon of the city's '70s progressivism, closed its doors, not long after building an $8 million processing plant in Samoa.

ACRC, in addition to its westside Arcata community dropoff center, had processed most of the Humboldt Waste Management Authority's recycling collected from Eureka, Arcata, Ferndale, Rio Dell, Blue Lake and parts of the unincorporated county. But after ACRC raised its prices, HWMA found another processor in Willits.

ACRC was livid, along with much of the community, over the perceived persecution of a local institution and the loss of local jobs. Eventually, ACRC sued the HWMA, saying the authority had intentionally sabotaged its business in order to acquire the Samoa plant at a discounted price. See a bit more about the dispute, and the county's recycling landscape, here.

That never happened — both the Samoa facility and parts of ACRC's Arcata dropoff center were purchased by a third party, Eel River Disposal.

But the lawsuit wore on, until April 15, when HWMA Executive Director Jill Duffy announced that it settled.

HWMA agreed to pay ACRC $10,000 to settle the suit, and neither party admitted to wrongdoing, Duffy said. And the suit was dismissed with prejudice, meaning it cannot be filed again.

"That now places the matter to rest and will enable our respective parties and, probably, community as a whole, to move forward through this," Duffy said. Interestingly enough, the HWMA's contract with Solid Waste of Willits — which ACRC said was the center's death blow — is up at the end of 2016. HWMA is drafting a request for proposals to take over the authority's recyclables processing, which is expected to go out to bidders around the end of this year.

THE WEEK IN WEED

GRANT SCOTT-GOFORTH

Party On

By Grant Scott-Goforth

grant@northcoastjournal.com

This is lame,” murmured one of Arcata’s few hardcore stoners around 4:23 p.m. A couple of young men had stepped off the concrete slab at Redwood Park, the small piece of public property that the Humboldt Center for Constitutional Rights had wrested from the control of a zealous city staff over the course of the last few months (see “Save the Date,” April 2).

Around 100 people mingled at the park on the chilly, foggy afternoon. A disparate cross-section of Arcata: sporty young male stoners, restless and edgy traveler types, college professors, attorneys and media — lots of media. But bloggers, students and professional reporters weren’t the only ones collecting images. Organizers reported that eager police officers — around 10 of them at one point — avidly recorded HumRights’ gathering. By 4 p.m., much of the weed-enthusiast crowd had dissipated into the Community Forest. Most of the cops disappeared, too. A couple of them could be seen approaching groups, chatting briefly and returning to their arms-crossed outposts.

Arcata Police Chief Tom Chapman said nine people were cited for smoking in the park. “Generally speaking,” Chapman wrote in an email, “yesterday was similar to the past several ‘420 Days’ in terms of activity.” No one was arrested.

Jim Gray, of McKinleyville, promoted his homemade board game at the event, saying he was more there to network than to sell copies.

HumRights director Jeffrey Schwartz said he would’ve liked to have more people show up to the event, but he seemed content to bask in the glow of city approval.

When the minute struck, a couple of hoots and hollers emanated from corners of the park. Former Arcata city councilman and HumRights board member Dave Meserve took a moment to announce to the small crowd, “It is 4:20, so if you’re going to indulge, please step onto the grass.” This, apparently, was to comply with Hum-

Rights’ promise that no one would smoke at its event.

A haunting, charcoal-streaked, Juggalo-esque woman twirled around the garbage cans. Young Humboldt State University students scooped hot dogs and apple pie onto plates. A frazzled, sun-beaten, Army-coat-sporting man bounced from conversation to conversation, warning of pirates and betrayers. Loco Coco, a clown visiting from Los Angeles, said he expected an enormous joint to be passed around, but he was happy with the turnout and appeared to have found ample doobage.

A few people sparked up. But far more smoke emanated from the barbecue where HumRights volunteers turned hot dogs, feeding a small, consistent contingent of hungry 20-somethings.

The price of store-bought weed in Washington has plummeted by more than half since legalization struck last year.

The state liquor control board reported that the average price for a gram of legal weed is around $12, down from $30 last summer when there were concerns of a marijuana shortage. Those fears quickly turned to worries of marijuana oversaturation, according to a Seattle Times report.

Current prices in Washington seem to reflect typical Humboldt dispensary prices, according to a quick Journal survey.

An upscale East Bay retirement community is home to a growing population of marijuana users. The Rossmoor senior citizen community boasts a medical marijuana club enrollment of 250 members according to a recent San Francisco Chronicle article, perhaps not surprising, given a Pew Research report that shows a 300-percent increase in support for legalization among seniors since the mid-1980s.

Rossmoor isn’t the only golf-and-marijuana-friendly retirement community. According to the Chronicle, residents of an Orange County senior village “have established a relationship with a Humboldt County grower and created a distribution network in the community that has the administration’s blessing.” ●

Spring in Humboldt

When the world seems new

A photo essay by Ken Malcomson

ORANGE LILIES BLOOM NEAR PRAIRIE CREEK.

PURPLE BURSTS OF LARKSPUR AND LUPINE SPREAD ACROSS THE BALD HILLS.

Air bright with sun-charged droplets floods the valleys. Wind kicks up, the sun climbs higher, and the turmoil and energy spur on the clouds, ripple lagoons, quicken the glittering rivers and compel small, new goats into battle for the top of ... whatever. A concrete block, maybe, if that's all their field's got. Flowers bust open, frothing with beauty. And when the storm passes, when the clouds and rain have swept aside, the earth is freshly painted: blue for the sky, green for the earth and mountains, white for the snow-dusted peaks. Your canvas awaits, Humboldt.

Please come join the Child Abuse Prevention Coordinating Council of Humboldt County and a growing number of community members in remembering children who have not survived abuse for the raising of the Children's Memorial Flag. This year the annual event is being held at the Boy's and Girl's Club Teen Center at 3015 J Street (Harris & J Streets) on Friday, April 24th, at 9 AM.

The flag was created in 1998 by a 16-year-old student in Alameda County, California, and is the centerpiece of the national public awareness campaign initiated by the Child Welfare League of America. The red flag depicts blue, paper-doll-like figures of children holding hands. In the center, the white chalk outline of a missing child symbolizes the children lost to violence. The Children's Memorial Flag was raised for the first time on April 11, 2002 during Child Abuse Prevention Month.

Representatives from the Department of Health and Human Services and the District Attorney's Victim Witness office will speak about the issue. Cindy Sutcliffe, CAPCC's current Chair of the Board will give a brief summary of the Council's activities in the last year. A moment of silence following raising of the flag will precede flute music and a poem to mark the occasion.

Coffee, tea and light baked goods will be available at 9 and the event will close at 10.

No Shame in Cans

Quick and dirty
black bean stew

By Louisa Rogers

tabletalk@northcoastjournal.com

Has cooking always been so complicated? When I look at recipes in magazines like Cooking Light and Bon Appetit, the pages themselves seem weighed down with all the ingredients to be prepared in intricate separated stages, then elegantly choreographed for assembly, like a culinary ballet. If I weren't comfortable with my keep-it-simple-stupid style of cooking, I'd feel intimidated by today's baroque cooking culture.

I'm not alone. A 2011 survey conducted online by Impulse Research (on behalf of Bosch home appliances) found that nearly a third of Americans prefer to think about cooking or drool over cooking shows on TV than to actually sauté, braise or roast. Even here in organic Humboldt County, how many of us buy all those lovely beets at the farmers' market, imagine delicious banquets and then feel guilty when we don't use them?

I came to cooking late in the game, having grown up with a passel of sisters. The fact that I was never one of Mother's anointed helpers in the kitchen never bothered me until around age 24, when, living alone, I began to feel uneasy that my fridge was cavernously empty and I was subsisting on Doritos and toast. Really.

One bold evening I began. Gingerly, I heated up a can of chili, transferred it to a bowl and dug in. Food snobs may sneer, but hey, if it's in a bowl, it's a meal — and surely we can agree that canned chili is an improvement over Doritos. Soon after, I watched my friend Susan add sautéed onions and celery to a can of clam chowder, making it thicker and chunkier. Until then, it had never occurred to me that you could actually supplement the contents of a can with fresh ingredients.

Next I tried a tuna fish casserole recipe out of the venerable Fannie Farmer Cookbook, which called for a can of mushroom soup, a can of tuna fish, three hard-boiled eggs and noodles. Fannie explained exactly how to boil the eggs and cook the pasta (well, noodles: this was the '70s. The term "pasta" had yet to cross the pond). I faithfully followed her every word, subscribing to my future mother-in-law's wisdom, "If you can read, you can cook." And at My First Dinner Party, the guests pronounced the casserole "gourmet."

Almost 40 years later, I no longer buy cream of mushroom soup, but in my cupboard you'll find rows of canned navy, cannellini, garbanzo, fava and black beans. Another friend described the early years of her marriage, when she and her husband were chronically broke, as "the rice-and-beans days." I laughed, because I could live on rice and beans for the rest of my life. Especially ever-versatile black beans. Add a shot of cumin and cut-up mango or chutney and they taste Indian; add orange juice and they turn Brazilian. Add coffee or cocoa, and they taste "haunting," as one recipe described it.

I know what you're thinking: cans? Yes, I know the beans would be even healthier if I cooked them from scratch (and I'd certainly feel more virtuous), but I'm not one to plan ahead and by the time I want them, I want them now.

Here's my recipe. To lighten it up, I skip the grain and just have the black beans alone. Measurements are approximate, depending on your love of garlic and curry.

Quick & Dirty Canned Black Bean Stew

Serves 2

Ingredients and method:

For the rice:

2/3 cup rice or farro

Start this first because it takes longer to cook than the veggies. Boil 2 cups of water. Stir in 2/3 cup brown rice. Cover and let it simmer 45-50 minutes. (If you use farro, simmer only 30 minutes.)

For the stew:

1 tablespoon olive oil

2-3 big garlic cloves, minced (I love garlic, so I use a lot)

1 onion, chopped, or 1 cup of chopped leek, white and light green portions

1 medium carrot, sliced

½ sweet potato, sliced

1 celery or bok choy stem, chopped

½ green, yellow or red pepper, chopped

1 handful cilantro, finely chopped

½ cup water or broth

¼ cup tomato or pasta sauce

1 can black beans

2 teaspoons curry powder

sprinkling of cumin

sprinkling of fennel, if desired

salt and pepper to taste

Warm the olive oil in a 3-quart saucepan. Add the garlic and onion/leek and sauté for 2 minutes. Stir in the chopped carrot, celery/bok choy, pepper and sweet potato.

Add the pasta sauce and water or broth. Pour in more water if the vegetables start to stick to the pot. Add the cilantro and spices and cook 5 minutes or until the vegetables are tender.

Add the black beans and stir them into the vegetables.

Serve the chili on top of the rice, unless you're someone whose rice doesn't always come out just right (ahem). Mixing the rice and black beans together will hide any imperfections.

Serve and dig in. ●

When sex is a pain

By Melinda Myers

sexuallyspeaking@northcoastjournal.com

What does it mean when sex hurts? I'm not talking about consensual power-exchange here — that's a topic for another day. I'm talking about pain that happens when it shouldn't, like when you'd like to be fully immersed in the joys of deeply satisfying and pleasurable sensations, and find yourself wincing instead. It's a common problem, yet many of those affected feel alone. People often suffer for a long time before they finally discuss it with a health care provider.

Recently, a lovely woman of a certain age said to me that she was astounded when she first experienced painful sex. We shared a moment of wonder at how little it's talked about. Why is it, we asked, that we avoid discussing this thing many of us share and none of us like? I think our reluctance to discuss and ask for help to improve our intimate lives stems from this idea that "normal" people don't have sex problems. It's a myth, simply put, that love conquers all, at least when it comes to pain.

Sexual pain can be a side effect of some very commonly used medications. You may already know that anti-depressants can cause dryness and vaginal discomfort, in addition to negatively affecting sexual response and orgasm. However, since we have this wonderful early spring, I'd like to point out the lesser-known effects of antihistamines. It seems unfair that we have to choose between having an itchy, sneezy nose or a happy vagina. Antihistamines dry up mucus membranes well, but can't distinguish one kind from another. Hence, happy sex becomes unhappy and painful.

If that isn't enough, some women using oral contraceptives experience a decrease in natural lubrication and libido. Because all of these are so commonly prescribed, it isn't unusual for a person to be taking something to elevate her mood, something to control her allergies and something else to protect against pregnancy. This can be a recipe for sexual pain. Other factors, too, like stress (family, money, work), poor diet, lack of hydration and general time pressure can affect the body's response to sex. You can probably guess the cycle this suggests.

I can't solve the stress problem, unfortunately. However, I do have some ideas that might help with the pain. The first and most important adjustment is to allow time for good sex to happen. Sometimes all it takes is a more patient approach. It isn't a race to an imagined "finish." Good sex is more like a meandering journey of connection and sensation. However, when that isn't sufficient, lubricants can help.

But not all sexual lubricants are created equal. Some are better for certain activities, others are better for certain body parts and still others are best for those sensitive to additives. Hybrid lubes contain mostly water but also have a small-to-moderate amount of silicone. These allow for greater lubrication for a longer period of time. Because silicone is a large molecule, it stays on the surface of the skin to which it's applied. It also has a very long shelf life, which means it won't require harmful preservatives like parabens. Look for something thicker rather than thinner. These lubes are great for anal or vaginal sex. Some people have great luck with plain, organic coconut oil, but I've found it grainy and not quite thick or slippery enough for those with pain issues.

Sometimes the pain results from muscle contractions. There you are, desiring nothing more than to experience the pleasure of feeling your body surrounding that of your lover and your muscles won't cooperate. The contractions can affect the muscles of the vagina and anus, making this kind of sexual pain an equal-opportunity annoyance. Fortunately, it's also treatable and you'll want to consult a sex therapist.

Besides these sexual difficulties, those of us with physical maladies often have to make adjustments to enjoy sex fully. If your back, neck or legs are injured or hurting, it takes some (worthwhile) adjusting to get the most enjoyment possible. There are a variety of positional aids and technique changes that can help resolve these difficulties.

In the event that time, lubrication and positioning aren't enough, talking with a knowledgeable person might help. I've noticed there are more tools available recently in the form of both books and devices designed to assist those experiencing sexual pain. We also have some wonderful sex-positive healthcare providers locally who can help people figure out the best strategies for their specific situations. Good sex is a birthright of being human, and worth the effort it takes to get it. ●

An Epic Week (!!!)

All the best strings, a rock reunion, True Detective and 'Mrs. Robinson' — seriously

By Jennifer Savage

thesetlist@northcoastjournal.com

Guys! This week is nuts! I feel like I'm 15! So many exclamation points!!! Forget about sleep or saving money or anything other than getting yourself out to at least one of these excellent shows!

Friday: A Thing!

It's not just any ol' thing, The Stringthing. It's a very special type of thing. With strings! But not just any ol' strings. Very special strings! For example, you've got The No Good Redwood Ramblers' powerful blend of boot-stomping rhythm and old-time flavor snaking through everything from traditional murder ballads and whiskey-soaked drinking songs to Appalachian fiddle tunes and bluegrass standards. Banjo! Fiddle! Guitar! Mando-lin! Double-bass!

But wait — that's not all! You also get The Cherry Pickers, a young-ish bluegrass band whose twangy style hits that sweet spot between contemporary and traditional.

And the goodness doesn't stop there! Look! It's The Lyndsey Battle Trio, featuring Gulf Coast singer/songwriter Lyndsey Battle, plus Cory Goldman on guitar and banjo, and Brian Hennesy on upright bass, bringing the music of the Mississippi River Delta, folk-style, to Humboldt County.

And that's still not all, because the Stringthing also includes The Compost Mountain Boys, who have performed traditional bluegrass music in Humboldt County since 1991! Over the years one could say they've "composted" their music into an inspirational bluegrass experience. All this foot-pounding mayhem unfolds at the Arcata Theatre Lounge. Doors at 7 p.m., music at 8 p.m. Tickets are $10 advance (at Wildberries and The Works), $14 at the door, 21-and-over.

Friday: A groovy thing goin'

Accomplished singer-songwriters Derren Raser and Michael Dayvid had a brilliant idea: to present an evening of the music of Simon & Garfunkel. Their iconic music stretches across generational lines and, Raser says, "is still as fresh and beautiful today as it was in the '60s when it was originally recorded and performed." Celebrate starting at 7 p.m. at the D Street Neighborhood Center and bring the kids because this show is all ages. Cover is $8 for those 13-and-over, 12-and-under get in for free.

Saturday: Return of the Letdown!

Feel the thrill run through your veins, Humboldt rock fans — once-local garage rockers The Letdown are set to play their first show in 12 years with an-almost-as-rare reunion of Humboldt's Guided By Voices cover band TIGER-BOMB! The Letdown consists of Dame-on Waggoner (ex-Lowlights, Scared of Chaka), H.A. Nethery (ex-Sin Men, Foster Kids), Ryan Cook (ex-SWoD, Crimewive!) and Bandon Wayne (ex-Hasselhoff, Couch of Eureka). TIGERBOMB! is Ray Johnson (ex-Cutters), Danny McAlerney (ex-Trash & Roll), Aaron Karl (Scary Photographs), Ryan Cook and Jensen Rufe (of Rural Rock and Roll fame and a judge at this year's Humboldt International Film Festival — the reunion is part of HIFF's closing night benefit). We here at the Setlist do very much love a rockin' good time and this is going to be one for the ages, as elucidated by Rufe himself:

Top 3 reasons why people should come to this show:

1. "This may be the last chance to ever see the Letdown perform! It took us 12 years to get these boys back in town at the same time to finally reunite (H.A. is flying all the way from Florida, where he is a doctor of philosophy and a college professor)."

2. "It is a good cause! The cover goes to the awesome student-run Humboldt International Film Festival (see page 29). The HIFF invited me back to be a judge this year. (I'm very excited about that!)"

3. "This show is gonna feel like an old

Vista show! There are several dozen ex-Humboldt music scene veterans coming back into town either to perform at this show or just to be spectators in what is turning out to be a general 'reunion week-end' of sorts! For that reason, it is most assuredly going to be at risk of approaching capacity. (So anyone dying to see this show who wants to guarantee their admission should probably get there early.)"

The extravaganza explodes at the Alibi, 11 p.m., $10 minimum but larger donations are welcome, 21-and-over.

Saturday: Your Eureka alt-gig

A very fine option awaits you at the Siren's Song Tavern where synthy garage rockers Companion Animal (I am loving, loving, loving CA's track "Pin Drop," available at www.companionanimal.bandcamp.com) and psych-rockers Strix Vega will play beginning at about 9:30 p.m. Free show! All ages!

Monday: Celtic at The Sanctuary

Groundbreaking progressive Celtic band Alba's Edge celebrates the release of its debut album Run to Fly at The Sanctuary as part of the Northwest leg of its CD release tour. A brother-sister collaboration between pianist Neil Pearlman and fiddler Lilly Pearlman, Alba's Edge has been rapidly gaining attention for its blend of Celtic music with jazz, Latin and funk influences. Over the past few years the quartet has played festivals and concerts around the U.S. and toured Mexico through the U.S. Consulate in Guadalajara as ambassadors of American Celtic music. Show starts at 8 p.m., admission is $5 to $20 sliding scale at the door.

Tuesday: The Handsome Family!

Our friends at the Arcata Playhouse invite you to "enter the dark forest of The Handsome Family and let the beautiful branches surround you. ... This is haunting music in the most wonderful way — brilliant, emotionally charged and totally unique." Oh, this will be a magnificent show! (You may remember The Handsome Family from when the duo opened for Andrew Bird last season at Center Arts.) If you're unfamiliar with the band, here's the skinny: The Handsome Family is a 20-year songwriting collaboration between husband and wife, Brett (music) and Rennie Sparks (words). Their lyrics and music are very intense, highly descriptive and full of meticulously-researched narrative and musical re-imaginings of everything from Appalachian holler, psychedelic rock, Tin Pan Alley and medieval ballad. The songs are also full of romantic longing for nature's mysterious beauty and the tiny wonders of everyday life. The duo pairs sweet melody with sad harmony, love poetry with dark beats. This is music of the little deaths that make you resonate with life.

The band's 2013 release Wilderness is a record about animals and the wonders of nature intertwined with true stories of Stephen Foster's death in a Bowery flophouse, General Custer's shiny boots as he lay dead on a Montana prairie, and the capture of Mary Sweeney, the Wisconsin Window Smasher of 1896. The Handsome Family is best known for the song "Far From Any Road," which was used as True Detective's main title theme, but also for keen interest from artists like Andrew Bird who recorded a whole release covering their songs. Doors open at 7:30 p.m. with music starting at 8 p.m. Advance tickets are $18 general, $15 for Playhouse members. All tickets are $20 day of the show. Tickets are available at Wildberries or via www.arcataplayhouse.org.

Happy to See Me?

Cheesecake meets beefcake when Portland's Cocked and Loaded boylesque troupe bumps and grinds it out at 9 p.m. on Saturday, April 25 at the Eureka Inn's Palm Lounge ($12 door, $10 advance). Caravan of Glam emcee Ecstasy Inferno hosts this male revue with strip that's heavy on the tease.

The brains behind all this brawn is Justin Buckles, who says the show is "very sensual and not crass or in your face" — an old-fashioned approach he credits for the less-than-a-year-old act's sold-out shows. Expect performers Todd Allen, Romeo Bedwell, Jaxin Yoff and Gabriel to bring all of burlesque's winking humor, costumes (from lumberjack to S&M), and group and solo numbers — swapping out the sequins and feathers for six packs. This is the troupe's first trip away from its hometown fan base and Buckle says, "The boys are all really nervous." So be gentle with them. Photos and video are fine, and you're welcome to run up to the stage with cash tips, but no lap dances, ladies and gents. Be nice and you can stay for the after party, dancing with the boys "until they kick us out."

The next morning, Sunday, April 26, skip the walk of shame and have breakfast with the fellas at Pancakes for Pride at 9 a.m. at the Bayside Grange, where they'll do a few numbers with the Caravan of Glam drag stars ($8 brunch, $12 brunch and show). That show is daylight rated, but likely still hot enough to melt the ice in your Bloody Mary.

Help a Mother Out

Sure, you could sit back and watch the slow march of global warming turn our home into a wasteland, or you could step up and help keep it viable for a few more years. On Saturday, April 25, there are ample opportunities to do your part, as local environmental organizations host several Earth Day cleanups across the North Coast: Oyster Beach, 9 a.m. to 10 a.m.; Indian Island, 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.; Humboldt Coastal Nature Center, 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m.; Mad River/Blue Lake, 9 a.m. to noon; and Crab Park, 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m.

After you've spent the morning scouring beaches and river banks, do yourself a solid and head over to the Humboldt Coastal Nature Center for the Earth Day Hoedown from 2 p.m. to 6 p.m. There'll be food and beverages for sale (including the Taco Faktory and beer donated by Mad River Brewing Company), kid's activities, face-painting, a dutch raffle, live painting by Matt Beard, music by Lyndsey Battle and Striped Pig String Band, with a barn dance called by Nigella Mahal. If you volunteer for one of the above Earth Day cleanups, the event is free — otherwise it's a $5-$10 sliding scale.

Your Mama raised you right. Show her some love.

Play it Again

Drinking and watching Casablanca over and over at home alone in your pajamas is a little sad. Especially when you could be drinking and watching Casablanca out with people in fancy clothes. That's not sad. It's cultured and social.

On Friday, April 24, the Eureka Theater becomes Rick's Café Americain for a big-screen showing of the 1942 classic starring Humphrey Bogart and Ingrid Bergman ($10, $7.50 advance). Of all the gin joints, in all the towns, in all the world, walk into this one. Throw on some vintage swag if you've got it and belly up to the Art Deco bar at 6:30 p.m. for themed cocktails, perfect for drowning your sorrows over the one that got away. You'll always have Paris, and now you'll have the newly restored upstairs lobby to stroll in wistful style.

At 7:30 p.m., the old-timey newsreels, trailers and cartoons get rolling to warm you up for some timeless Hollywood magic. Bergman's Ilsa is caught between the deadpan and heartbroken Rick (Bogart) and her noble resistance-leader husband, Victor (Paul Henreid). But it's not just the most heart-wrenching love triangle ever, because you also get the smugly shady Claude Rains, the greasily desperate Peter Lorre and beady-eyed Sydney Greenstreet in a fez, plus Nazis and the seedy backdrop of wartime Morocco.

Here's looking at you, kid.

Reviews

WHILE WE'RE YOUNG. Noah Baumbach can run a little hot and cold. His collaboration with Wes Anderson yielded The Life Aquatic with Steve Zissou (2004), a near-perfect adventure comedy suffused with the sadness of missed opportunities and existential angst. The two re-teamed on Fantastic Mr. Fox (2009) but my feelings about that one aren't nearly as strong. When he's not helping Anderson construct his beautiful diorama worlds, though, Baumbach gets as down and dirty with the mundanity/horror of everyday human behavior as anybody. He emerged from a 10-year hiatus with The Squid and the Whale (2005), a meditation on growing up that still has the power to put me in a dark mood, if I think about it enough. In 2012 he and Greta Gerwig released Frances Ha, a finely crafted and often infuriating black and white portrait of 20-somethings confronting the looming specter of Real Life in New York City. Both Squid and Frances are movies of undeniable honesty and emotional power, each difficult to watch for different reasons. The former touches too-real adolescent sore spots and explores less familiar territory through a relatable lens. The latter, despite some nostalgia for the aimless days of late youth, is populated with unlikeable types. While honest and authentic, its focus on "free-spirited" hipsters, with the occasional glance at dull wealthy people, is alienating. With While We're Young, Baumbach finds a middle ground between these extremes, gracefully aging the neuroses that often characterize his work, examining middle age and balancing humor, sadness and discomfort.

Ben Stiller and Naomi Watts play Josh and Cornelia, a documentary movie director and producer, respectively. Josh apprenticed under Cornelia's dad, a legend in the field, but broke away, fearing a loss of artistic identity. Cornelia has gone on to success producing her father's movies, while Josh has (mis)spent a decade cobbling together an increasingly elusive narrative. He's run out of money, and nearly out of motivation, when he meets Jamie (Adam Driver) and Darby (Amanda Seyfried). Young hipsters with a great record collection and a devil-may-care/world-is-our-oyster attitude, they shine an unlikely but vivifying light onto Josh and Cornelia's relationship. In no time at all, he's wearing a shitty little fedora, she's taking hip-hop dance classes and their old friends — whose new baby drove a wedge between the couples initially — aren't inviting them to parties anymore. It's an exciting time, filled with sexual tension, cheap beer and a painfully on-the-nose ayahuasca retreat. As the relationship moves along, Josh allows Jamie greater and greater access to his professional resources and agrees to help in the production of Jamie's documentary project. Which is the moment when things go sideways.

My cynical side would like to call While We're Young an indictment of predatory hipsterism, but I think really that's just a testament to the richness of the material. Baumbach's writing, aided by the excellent cast, is subtle and nuanced, creating real-life ambiguity. Sure, Jamie may be seven-tenths awful manipulator, full of insufferable tics and hackneyed impulses, but he's also a pretty cool guy. Maybe he's just ambitious in a way that makes some of us uncomfortable. Josh, by the same token, is sensitive and unsure of himself, but he's also vindictive and resentful of his aging. As good as Watts and Seyfried are, their characters are primarily foils to their male counterparts. Although Cornelia and Darby both get brief opportunities for the airing of grievances, this one's about the boys. Or men who act like boys, which I suppose we all do, much of the time. R. 97m.

DANNY COLLINS. Despite the throw-away title and what might seem on paper like an eye-rolling familiar scenario, this is one of those rare Hollywood offerings: an un-ironic yet watchable movie about being a grown-up.

We meet the titular singer as a nervous 20-something being interviewed by a rock rag on the release of his debut album. When the interviewer suggests that fame and money might change his perspective, Danny acknowledges his fear that this might be true. Smash cut to 40-some years later, and Danny (Al Pacino) is still on the road, making millions half-singing Diamond/Jones style garbage ballads. He's got a McLaren Mercedes, an Los Angeles mansion, a formidable collection of scarves and a trophy girlfriend he can barely tolerate. He's also self-medicating with booze and cocaine to ward off his daily suicidal thoughts. When his manager/best friend (Christopher Plummer) presents him with a personal letter to him from John Lennon, which was intercepted and never delivered (a true story and the basis for the movie), Danny re-evaluates and makes some changes. He cancels the remainder of his tour and sets up camp in a Hilton in New Jersey to attempt a connection with the son he's never met (Bobby Cannavale), his wife (Jennifer Garner) and their daughter. Meanwhile, he's trying to strike up a romance with the hotel manager (Annette Bening).

This could easily dissolve into PG mush, but writer Dan Fogelman (Crazy Stupid Love, Last Vegas), making his directing debut, navigates things artfully, allowing his characters to make mistakes and act like obstinate fools. Ultimately, sure it's about reconnection and redemption, but smart writing and terrific acting make up for the clichés. R. 107m.

MONKEY KINGDOM. A Disney documentary about a monkey and her baby in a South Asian jungle. Narrated by Tina Fey. G. 81m.

PAUL BLART: MALL COP 2. Kevin James reprises his fat-guy-on-a-Segway act, this time on a family vacation in Las Vegas. PG. 94m.

UNFRIENDED. More "found footage," this time from a laptop chronicling a cyberhaunting with messages from ... a dead girl. R. 82m.

WOMAN IN GOLD. Ryan Reynolds struggles to keep up with Helen Mirren, who plays a Holocaust survivor fighting to reclaim her family's art in this based-on-a-true-story Oscar-bait. PG13. 109m.

Impostors and Bloodsuckers

By Anthony Westkamper
humbug@northcoastjournal.com

A Bee or Not a Bee?

Recently out in the yard, a glimpse of the insect world's most popular warning colors of black and yellow hinted that the buzzing around me might be a bumblebee. I was eager to get a good picture to send into the Bumblebee Watch Project. Noting declining bumblebee populations, it requests anyone with a camera take photos and submit them so the organization can track populations and locations of various species of bumblebees. When the insect finally landed, I got my photo.

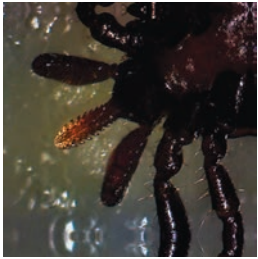

When I downloaded it to my computer I was surprised to see that it was not a bumblebee all, but a 'Syrphid fly.' This is a member of the family of hover flies, many of which are noted for their resemblance to bees and wasps. They exhibit classic Batesian mimicry, wherein one species gains some benefit by resembling another more dangerous one. In this case, the innocuous hover flies almost always resemble something that can sting. They usually live off of flower nectar and in the process provide pollination services to the flowers much like the bees they imitate. There are syrphid fly species which emulate honeybees, bumblebees and yellow jackets extremely well. After all, their lives really do depend on it.

Interestingly enough, today when I was again buzzed by something I found it was actually a bumblebee. So, the fly not only copies the bee's protective coloring, but its annoying flight habit as well. And they say liars never prosper.

Ticks

I am not a person who says, "There is room for every living thing in my world."

Nope, I hate ticks. They're vectors for illnesses like lyme disease, Rocky Mountain spotted fever, and a new one from Kentucky: Bourbon virus (named for the county where it was first discovered, not the liquor). And they give bugs a bad name. They are more closely related to spiders than insects, closer still to mites.

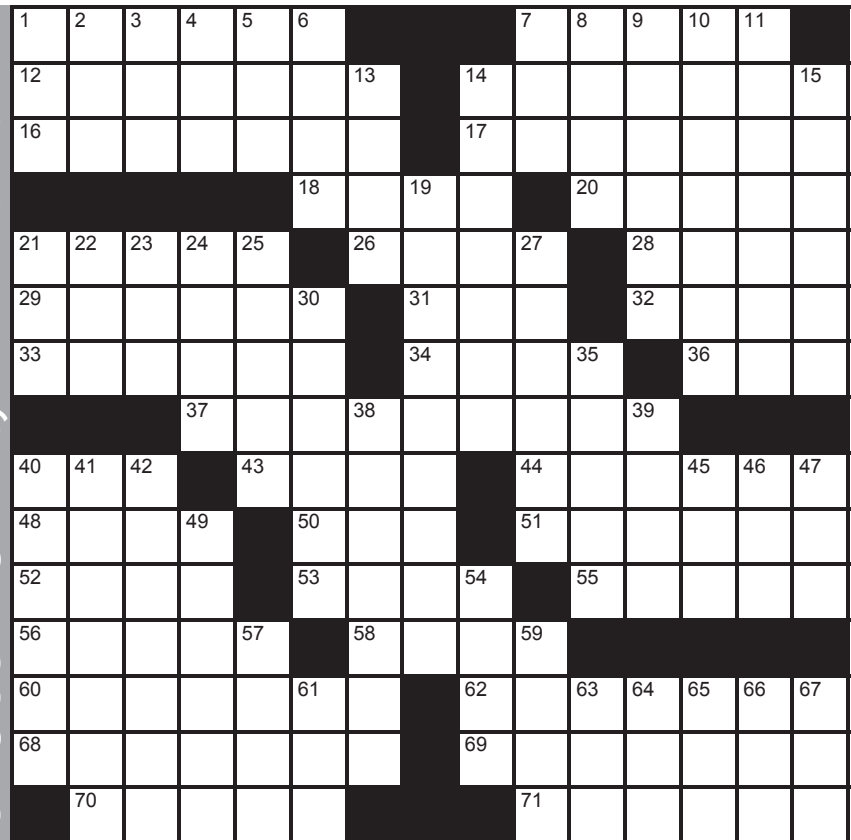

If get a tick attached to you or your pet, don't squeeze or kill the tick while it's attached. You don't want to cause the critter to disgorge the contents of its gut into you, which squeezing, prodding and coating with Vaseline or heating with a match head can do. Regurgitated tick juice will certainly contain alien proteins that can cause allergic reactions, and the juice may contain disease organisms. Want to know why they're so difficult to remove? Look at the tick's head. That beak is designed drive in and hold on like a barbed fishhook. Pulling on the body usually just breaks the head off, leaving the mouth embedded in the wound.

So what can you do? According to the Centers for Disease Control, the best thing to do is use narrow tweezers, grasp it as close to your skin as possible and pull it out. From Down Under, where ticks may be an even bigger problem than hereabouts, the Australasian Society of Clinical Immunology and Allergy suggests freezing them with an aerosol starting fluid, like you use to start a recalcitrant lawn mower, to freeze the critter before removal.

Although this method is not sanctioned for human use in the US, there is a product for use on pets.

If you wish to keep the tick to show medical professionals or your close friends, I suggest sealing it between two layers of clear plastic tape. It makes for easy handling, seals in all potential disease organisms, and leaves the specimen easily examined through the tape. I do not bother killing them first, because I really don't care. ●
